Written just ten months after the birth of his first child, Matthew Kelly reflects on the challenges of passing faith onto children. He writes about his own faith, why religion has played such a powerful role throughout history, why so many people are leaving the Catholic Church today, and the hopes he has for his son when it comes to the spiritual life. Kelly writes, "Religion is the primary humanizing force in a person, in a society, in history. In my own experience this is particularly true of the Catholic form of Christianity.

Catholicism makes me a-better-version-of-myself. It makes me more human." But ultimately his reflection centers on a single question—"If I could teach my son one thing that would ensure his appreciation of Catholicism, what would it be?" As always, Kelly's ideas are engaging and challenging, but writing for the first time as a father it is clear that he is growing in new and fascinating ways.
